CURTIS DANIEL HOMES

Where did your passion for home and design come from?

Ever since I was a kid I had an interest in architecture—skyscrapers, hotels, and homes. I actually had a mini drafting table in my bedroom and went on to spend some time as an architecture major in college. Ultimately I ended up as a home builder. I really enjoy my role because plans on paper are fun, but I also get to help execute the bigger picture.

What is your favorite part of this project?

There are so many great parts of this particular project, but if I had to choose just one it would be the combination of the front staircase to the front door and foyer. The exposed steel stringer staircase in the front of the house is really phenomenal. The cables make a seamless transition into the five foot steel pivot door, which leads into an all glass foyer. This room has two 15 x 9 foot glass panels in the front and back creating an almost see through effect. It makes a big statement when you come into the home and highlights the gorgeous Lowcountry land surrounding it.

What advice would you give homeowners looking for a builder?

The number one thing I would say is to make sure you find a good fit. You're going to spend somewhere between nine months to two years with a builder and you want to make sure that person is someone you feel comfortable with. Cost is certainly important, but having a builder that will truly guide you through the process is key when making your decision.

How would you describe your work?

We will build anything—there's no one particular style that we stick to. The goal of Curtis Daniel Homes is "surpassing the ordinary." That is what we try to do in every facet of interaction with customers from communication to quality to responsiveness. We want to help them take their dream plans and make those a reality. Most importantly, we want our customers to feel like we are providing them with a first class home building experience.

Step Into Spring

As the warmer weather approaches, it's time to start planning ahead for your outdoor living space. During this in between period when we still have some cool days, take the time to prepare your landscape for the summer months. We've talked with Lowcountry experts on landscapes and landscape lighting to help you devise a plan for your yard.

This Daniel Island Home by Curtis Daniel Homes displays an array of grasses leveled with other grassy plants, designed by REMARK Landscape Architecture.

Solid Ground

Springtime is a great season to consider adding new hardscape elements to your home to help elevate the landscape even more. Things such as new walkways, a pool, seating areas, or other hardscapes will be great additions as you prepare for summer. One of REMARK Landscape Architecture's staple elements are these corten steel planters filled with wispy grasses for a fun, ethereal ambiance to welcome you up the front steps of this stunning Lowcountry home.

The dock and trees are uplit to make it easier to get around the property as the sun goes down and into the evening.

Enhance Your View

The same Daniel Island home is transformed at night with lighting by Outdoor Lighting Perspectives. Landscape lighting should be used in the darkest places of your yard to not only enjoy the environment, but also to feel safe while you're outside during nighttime hours. When determining what lighting to add, talk to your professional to help decide which trees would look best uplit. Consider how you can give width and depth to the property so you can best enjoy the whole space.
